

100% FOR SUPER NINTENDO PLAYERS スーパープレイ £2.75 500円

INDEPENDENT SUPER NINTENDO MAGAZINE

SUPER

ISSUE

37

NOVEMBER 1995

PLAY

SUPER BOMBERMAN

Better than playing by yourself?

3

RETRO
FEVER

Discover the appeal
of old games

future publishing
Your guarantee of value

REVIEWED!
Chrono Trigger
Mortal Kombat 3

PLUS!

Big sports game play-off!

ULTRA 64

The latest and hottest news -
inside!

ANIME WORLD
P20

The soft world of Mamoru Shiro exposed.

LIVE FROM HELL CITY P24

Look to the future
with a visit to Fantoom Earthworld.

FANTASY QUEST
P20

Buckle up these mobile suits - Front
Mission's look.

IRRESPONSIBLE
PICTURES P20

The UK release of Six Street Fighter
anime arrives!

LIVE

FROM HELL CITY

By Nihon Sekai-yusu

Famimaga Earth World 95: the show which showcases every showy new Nintendo release on its way to Japanese gamestore shelves. Super Play joined the mad rush for the Square Soft stand, naturally...

The star of Fushigi no Dungeon 2 smiles shyly from Chun Soft's stand.

Last year's Earth World event took place in the very heart of Tokyo, in Harumi, but this time around, on August 24-26, it was the turn of Yuenji Park, a heaving amusement centre set in the suburbs of Japan's capital city, to play host to one of the biggest events in the Super Famicom's calendar.

The venue change was down to Nintendo's current Virtual Boy sales push, the theory being that Yuenji Park's numerous entertainment attractions would draw potential Veebee customers (the younger gaming sector) like alcoholics to a free beer festival. But more on the big N's potentially volatile red-LED project later.

Slightly smaller than last year's event, FEW 95 saw a total of 72 SFC games presented, with RPGs charging in to take centre stage by force, leaving much lesser represented categories such as action, puzzle and strategy to scoop up attention leftovers available only after the Nipponese gaming public had enjoyed their first opportunity to get their mitts on the big new releases from Square Soft and Enix.

Square's Seiken Densetsu 3 attracted enormous interest, naturally – the new and much-vaunted triangle system proving especially popular, being a great progression from that of Secret Of Mana. Enix's contribution came in the form of a work-in-progress version of Dragon Quest VI, which revealed many new locations and characters. The 32-megabit action RPG Tenchi So So, which was covered in last month's Fantasy Quest, also had an airing, with most who played it claiming it bettered both Soul Blazer and Illusion Of Gaia.

1995's Earth World was a smaller event than that of last year, and a sober affair compared to UK shows.

"Fancy a game of Final Fight 3?"
"Not really, no."

Banpresto's Tenchi Muyo (below) is based directly on the evergreen anime TV series.
What a twee colour scheme.

While besotted types discussed
the saleability of Enix's products, younger gamers were happy just
to marvel at their lush graphics.

Enix are pinning their hopes on *Dragon
Quest VI*, which is due in December.
Japanese gamers' mouths are watering.

Falcom's Ys
series, jam-packed with action RPG-
ness, is now in its fifth incarnation
and will be released
only on the SFC.

Human Hudson's wonderfully entitled Crystal Bears strutted into the ARPG arena, its inspiration coming from one of their previous releases,
Dungeon Explorer, an old
Gauntlet-style PC Engine hit which recently also made an appearance
on the Mega CD.

Offering a Mana-style three-player multitap option and action along the lines of Illusion of Time, it looked like a another innovative little gem from the geezers who brought us
S.O.S. and The Firemen.
Hudson Soft

Mega Man X3 was one of Capcom's biggest games at the show. Despite Mega Man's illustrated design upheaval, he's not been upgraded to obviously in the game itself.

continued to plunder their back catalogue with Far East of Eden Zero, an update of an ageing PC Engine RPG. A mightily colourful adventure, it's packed with such classically oriental images as elaborate pagodas and the odd flying dragon boat or two. Despite Hudson's continuing interest in the Western market, however, few if any of these are likely to be translated.

After an agonising wait of almost 18 months, Japanese gamers were finally able to experience an almost finished version of Enix's Tactics Ogre: Let Us Cling Together
at the show. It was certainly one of the most attractive games there, with glorious colour schemes and breathtaking attention to detail throughout, and it's now been confirmed for an October release in Japan.
We'll have a full report on this potential
stonker in Fantasy Quest next month.

Banpresto, known chiefly in Japan for their Puyo Puyo series, had Tenchi Muyo running on their stand. Using a beautiful pastelly colour scheme, it's an isometric RPG with puzzle-led gameplay à la Ladytalker. Will it certainly looking forward to that one.

Moving away from the world of sword
swishery and magical caperings, Soft Gold's Rendering Ranger was certainly the cause of much eyebrow raising among Earth World attendees. Featuring SGI workstation-rendered graphics throughout, it's one looker of a game, with a slew of shiny spacecraft designs and alien beasts galore. Whether it'll incorporate such images into a playable finished game as successfully as Rare have been able is currently open to debate.

Interestingly, it's being published by Virgin's Japanese arm – we approached their UK division for details on a possible UK release only to learn that they aren't yet even aware of its existence. Oh well.

Following the excellent conversions of strategy sprawlers Sim City 2000 and Civilisation, Pack-In Video showed their SFC translation of Take The A-Train III. Originally released in Japan on the PC 98 series (NEC's continually evolving Japanese PC standard) way back in 1990, when it was awarded Best Simulation by LOGIN magazine. The sequel, A-Train IV, has appeared on both the PlayStation and PC 98 to similar acclaim, but its complexity forced Pack-In to opt for a conversion of the previous game instead.

Capcom's presence at the show – which was considerably smaller than usual – confirmed what many had suspected for a long while: apart from having new levels and some very slight gameplay enhancements, Rockman X3 and Final Fight 3 were very similar to instalments that had gone before. Likewise their Donald Duck-licensed platformer, which was awkwardly similar to the Mickey Mouse series. The sad thing, of course, is that here is a company once renowned for innovation and excellence, reduced to what has become a sequel-churning factory. We'll have a minute's silence, please. Thank you.

We didn't know who this furry skunk-like fellow was, but he was jolly friendly.

Happier news concerned ASK's Battletech 3050, an adaptation of a Mega Drive title (itself based upon a tabletop wargaming system by FASA) using Front Mission-style robots. With particularly fluid action (for what could have been a lumbering game), a shed-load of futuristic weaponry on hand, and the irrefutably sexy lure of umpteen-foot-high mecha, it was arguably the hot game of the show. Interplay originally had the Rendering Ranger's hero – what a rock chap.

Rendering Ranger contains masses of images of this style. Look out Rare.

Battletech 3050 is exactly the sort of thing Japanese gamers go for. They're still mecha mad.

Space Squash is better than you think it is. A Train II (Donkey Kong) is also a good one.

Space Squash is better than you think it is. A Train II (Donkey Kong) is also a good one.

appear before Christmas.

The entire second floor of Young Planet's main building was dedicated to the Veebee, with some 10 new games for the system on display. Sadly, few titles showed promise, with Hudson's Bob's Virtual Bomberman and Procyon Zone II being little shoot-'em-ups from Contra-style, demanding nothing more than a button bash. Hudson's latest features classic Bomberman gameplay but, rather unfortunately, it neither exploits the full potential of the Veebee – it was a quarter-view display with only a handful of objects manipulated using 3D – nor does it utilise the link-up cable for multi-player games – kind of dark considering the nature of the game.

Those who've seen Jumping

Flash on the PlayStation will recognise the inspiration for the robotic characters in Conquest Space Squash, the company's other Veebee title. It's a Super Smash Bros style sim which sees you knocking projectiles back and forth in a 3D court. While presenting visually effective 3D, like so many other Veebee titles, it lacks that vital gameplay spark.

With upcoming software looking generally not much better than those available at launch, perhaps the Veebee is destined to die a messy death, after all. Certainly, many retailers have lost faith in the format already – you can pick up a machine in Japan for less than half its original street price.

In fact, it was down to the Virtual Fish game to finally clamp the screws of doom on the show – would you believe Virtual Fishing? Yep, you'll spin the reels to catch maggots and curse the one that gets away in 3D. We're looking forward to Virtual Crochet, Virtual Chip Of The Month and Virtual Doodling Off.

